or service of Trans-Atlantic mail from New York, Boston and Baltimore to various European ports. The loyalists who have these schemes n charge have thus far found their greatest stumbling block in the exressed opinion of Postmaster-General ennison, who prefers the self-sustaining system of ocean mail service. Gov. Dennison finds no difficulty in this system; on the contrary, he is unable to supply all the demands from owners of vessels, who apply for employment upon terms of the department, namely;

postages on the mails conveyed. The Postmaster-General steadily refuses to recommend any departure from the established policy of the Department, not only because of the financial wants of the Government, but as well from the absence of any necessity of special legislation in behalf of the Trans-Atlantic service. He thinks the kind of legislation urged by the lobbyists would retard rather than advance the general commercial prosperity.

Particularly would it be injudiciou to subsidize separate lines from each of our Atlantic ports. The schemers are becoming impatient, and are at a loss of vessels.
